

Top 10 Twitter Languages in London

Summer 2012

To zoom in and explore the map go to metro.co.uk/Twittermap

Twitter of Babel

IT'S A networking city hailed as a global village.

And now London's diversity has been mapped, courtesy of Twitter. A colour-coded chart pinpoints the location and language of 3.3-million tweets sent in the capital.

The digital map was the work of University College London PhD student Ed Manley and James Cheshire, a lecturer at UCL's Centre of Advanced Spatial Analysis.

They captured tweets sent using GPS-enabled devices and put them

by SAM SMITH

through Google's Chromium Compact Language Detector, which identified the language used.

Unsurprisingly, English accounted for 92.5 per cent of those sent but the project detected a total of 66 languages between March and August.

These included Basque, Haitian Creole and Swahili, and also revealed Tagalog – spoken in the Philippines – was the seventh most tweeted language. The study also outlined pockets of tweets, such as Arabic concentrated in the west of the capital and Turkish in the north.

Mr Manley said the project revealed a few matches but 'a lot of the time it didn't actually match in the same volume as we expected'.

He added: 'A lot of the tweets you can see are along train commuter lines, roads or from people at events.'

'They're mostly going to be people who live in London.'

vodafone

Get a new Pay as you go smartphone from £70

And save even more when you trade in your old phone with Vodafone Buyback

Go in store today

or visit vodafone.co.uk/paygphones

Save £35

Samsung GALAXY Ace Now £100

Huawei Ascend G 300 Now £100

Samsung GALAXY Y Now £80

Vodafone Smart II Now £70